WAS IT A MISTAKE? A Mysterious Package Exploded Near Brooklyn City Hall.

Supposed to Have Been Thrown from the Garfield Building.

Pedestrians in the neighborhood of the Brooklyn City Hall were startled shortly after 10 o'clock this morning by the loud explosion of a bundle that looked like a bomb.

The explosion was on a crosswalk in front of the city hall, close to the Garfield building, on Court street. Policemen there first reached the place and found a young girl surrounded by a large crowd of men.

The girl gave her name as Lena Beams, seventeen years old, of 825 De Kalb avenue. She said that while attempting to cross the street, it seemed as if she had stepped on something and a report followed. She said that she was not hurt, but that she was very frightened.

One of the men in the crowd said he was almost positive that he had seen the bundle falling in the air, coming from an upper story in the Garfield building.

The paper was taken to the Adams street police station. It was the kind of a package usually used for holding explosives. The police believe the explosion was the result of a package that was not properly packed.

The package was found to contain a large quantity of dynamite. The police are now looking for the person who threw the package, and they believe it was a mistake.

THE DEAD MAN A SUSPECT IN AN OLD WHITECHAPEL TRAGEDY.

Other Foreign News of the Day Fresh from the Cable.

IST ASSOCIATED PRESS.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—William Walwright, the owner of a good paying brush factory, a respected church warden, and a Past Master of a Masonic lodge, committed suicide on the London Railway to-day.

His death recalls a crime that in 1875 created a great sensation in London. Henry Walwright, a brother of the man who killed himself to-day, was in that year arrested, convicted and hanged for murdering a woman named Harriet Lane, about twenty-five years old. Henry Walwright formerly carried on his brushmaking business at 215 Whitechapel road, and from this fact the crime came to be termed "The Whitechapel Murder." Thomas and William Walwright, his brothers, were both suspected of being implicated in the crime.

The discovery of the murder came about in a curious way.

Henry Walwright asked a brushmaker named Stokes to accompany him to his former premises in Whitechapel road to help him lift a couple of packages he had there. Stokes went with him and found two very heavy parcels wrapped in American cloth, with ropes tied around them. There was also a chopper, a hammer and a shovel that Walwright wanted Stokes to buy.

Stokes complied with the request of the bundle he was carrying and set it down until Walwright bought a vehicle. When Walwright was away looking for a vehicle, Stokes felt impelled, as he said, by a mysterious voice, to look into the bundle. He did so and was horrified to find a human body.

It was that of the Lane girl, who had disappeared some time previously, and whose relations with Walwright were afterwards revealed. The body had been chopped in pieces.
